An email to Sally

Hi Sally,

How are you? Something bad happened to me yesterday.

I went to my friend, Amy's birthday party by bus and I prepared a big, lovely birthday gift for her. Unfortunately, when I got off the bus, I forgot about the gift on the seat of the bus!

After arriving at Amy's home, I still did not remember about the gift. Until the time when we sang the birthday song and cut the birthday cake, I suddenly realized that the gift was left on the bus! I was so shocked and worried that Amy would be angry with me.

I honestly told Amy about the gift and said sorry to her. To my surprise, Amy said that the gift was not important. The most important thing was my coming. I was glad to have such a kind and understanding friend as her.

How are you recently? I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Yours,

Aaron

Teacher's comment: Well-done! Good use of connectives and adverbs! I like the detailed descriptions of the events.
